

EXERCISE

- Integrate external mock data for products and users from <https://fakestoreapi.com>.
- For products:
 - Use GET <https://fakestoreapi.com/products> to fetch the full product list.
 - Use GET <https://fakestoreapi.com/products/{id}> to fetch product details by ID.
 - Display the product list in your ProductList component (replace local products.json), including at least: title, price, category, and image.
 - When a product is selected (e.g., clicking “View Details” or a card), show a Product Detail view that uses data from the detail endpoint.

- For users:
 - Use GET <https://fakestoreapi.com/users> to fetch the user list.
 - Use GET <https://fakestoreapi.com/users/{id}> to fetch user details by ID.
 - Display a simple User List (e.g., username, name, email) and allow selecting a user to see a User Detail view.

- Technical requirements:
 - Use Axios or fetch in React to call the API endpoints asynchronously.
 - Manage loading and error states for each request (show a loading message and a user-friendly error message when something goes wrong).
 - Store the fetched data in React state (useState) and trigger requests with useEffect when the component mounts or when the selected ID changes.
 - Do not hard-code product or user data in the components; all data must come from <https://fakestoreapi.com>.
